

YRSA's Finances Take a Turn for the Worse

Ah! Now dear compatriots it suddenly all becomes clear to us here at the Cactus. For more than two years we have been wondering why did the Prince's closest friends, advisors and confidantes turn against him? Why did they feel the need to move sneakily behind his back and betray his trust?

Well, our recent bit of sleuthing has uncovered a most interesting tidbit of information regarding the finances of one of the G4's most trusted advisors, who is their mentor as well as their tool bag. The ancient communications director of the palace runs his own communications firm, YRSA Communications. Another example of Paris based companies seeing our principality as just another market to exploit. Plenty of fish in the barrel down south they say!

But maybe competitive entrepreneurship is not for everyone perhaps? YRSA Communications was able to lose 126,000 euros in 2023! What an achievement indeed! That is almost five months of residence in the rooms of a luxury hotel on the Côte d'Azur. Especially if we look at 2022 and see that the company was able to make a moderate profit of 79,000 euros instead (mainly thanks to the state of Monaco).

What could be the difference between the two years this causes us to wonder? This reversal in fortunes did take place at the same time that our communicator was chased away. So, dear fellow Monegasques, we have an approximate figure that this man, thanks to the help of his friends, was taking from our principality each year without remorse (or any discernable service rendered).

205,000 reasons to be happy that we are rid of these types around here...
